

The Federal Communications Commission

Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

I do not want to pay more for my telephone service!

As I understand the proposal currently being considered, it would result in people who make few long distance calls paying the same as people or businesses that make many calls. Can you please explain the rationale behind this proposal? Is this just an expedient way to apply the tax or is there some logical rationale (i.e., expense is accrued with each instance of a phone, rather than based on usage)?

While my current phone usage costs are not currently a prohibitive portion of my expenses, I certainly don't want to pay more than I currently am. Please consider the rationale behind the approach and the potential impact on individual users when making your decision on this proposal.

Sincerely,

Bonnie Brown
24187 Hagen
Macomb, Michigan 48042